1 rules governing reconsideration. It has attempted to take matters into its own hands and engineer
2 its own reconsideration, by imposing the case plan that the Court fully considered, and for 3 exceedingly good reasons rejected. The Court should nip Acacia's effort in the bud, and reset the 4 hearing on Acacia's summary-judgment motion to coincide with the hearing on defendants' 5 pending motions, once that date is set.

6 Moreover, even if the Court considered Acacia's complaints in its opposition, Acacia's
7 arguments still fall flat. First, as defendants have already fully briefed, proceeding as Acacia
8 suggests would be vastly less efficient than the plan the Court adopted. The Court's rulings
9 establish multiple grounds for invalidity under § 112 as a matter of law, but Acacia has refused
10 to stipulate to most of them. [See, e.g., Doc. No. 292 (Motion for Summary Judgment), laying 11 out numerous reasons that the Court's rulings have rendered the patents invalid under § 112 as a 12 matter of law.] Indeed, the consequences of the Court's rulings were clear after the Court issued 13 its Sixth Claim Construction Order, when Acacia initially agreed that the Court should decide all 14 the § 112 issues before any appeal. [See Doc. No. 267 at 2:12-17; Doc. No. 264-2 at pp. 12-13.]
15 Only later did Acacia seize on the strategy of presenting the § 112 issues to the Federal Circuit in 16 piecemeal appeals, with Acacia hand-selecting the ones that it will present first.

17 What's more, before any appeal of the merits could occur under Acacia's scheme, the 18 parties would first need to litigate whether this Court is in fact stripped of jurisdiction to decide
19 defendants' pending motions if it grants Acacia's motion first, as Acacia wrongly contends.<sup>2</sup> 20 Resolving that issue alone would inject many months of delay. It is far more expeditious and 21 efficient to bypass that dispute entirely, and decide all the § 112 issues together, then present a 22 complete package to the Federal Circuit just as the Court already ruled it would do.

23 Acacia's other arguments are equally meritless. The departure of the Court's technical 24 advisor, Dr. Schulz, has no relevance to this question. The Court is exceedingly well versed in

25
26 <sup>2</sup> Jang v. Boston Scientific Corp., 532 F.3d 1330 (Fed. Cir. 2008), cited by Acacia in its 27 opposition, provides no support whatsoever for Acacia's position. In Jang, the Federal Circuit 28 merely remanded to the district court to identify which of its claim constructions formed the basis of a stipulated judgment, so it did not need to review all the claim constructions. Id. at 1336. It has no bearing here at all.

1 these issues. Should it need any further technical assistance, it can readily obtain it. Further,
2 defendants would be substantially prejudiced if Acacia is allowed to carry out its plan. They will 3 be forced to litigate the jurisdictional issue before their already pending motions can be decided.
4 And should Acacia somehow prevail on that issue, they will be denied the opportunity to raise on 5 appeal grounds for invalidity that are already established as a matter of law by the Court's rulings.
6 Acacia, on the other hand, will suffer no prejudice if the Court decides all the pending motions
7 together, readying the case for a prompt appeal.

8 For these and other very good reasons, after fully considering Acacia's arguments, the 9 Court already ruled that defendants should bring their § 112 motions, and defendants have done 10 so. Acacia has now tried to take matters into its own hands and prevent the Court from deciding 11 those motions. For the reasons set forth above, the Court should continue the hearing date on 12 Acacia's motion, and set it to coincide with the hearing on defendants' motions, once that date is 13 set.

14 Respectfully submitted,
